Why Enrollment Projections are Important:

With many school districts still experiencing rapid changes in student populations, enrollment projections can help determine future staffing needs and facilities impact for upcoming years. The tricky part is identifying and understanding the factors that can influence changes. Whether you prepare enrollment projections annually or are conducting a study for the first time, the following are some of the best factors to consider.

- | | |
|--|--|
|  Accuracy of Past Projections |  Existing Housing |
|  Historical Enrollment |  Local Development |
|  Transfers |  Local Factors |
|  Birth Rates |  Open Enrollment |
|  School of Residence vs School of Attendance | |

How Cooperative Strategies Can Help You:

When preparing enrollment projections, Cooperative Strategies performs a specific series of activities and tasks in order to be as thorough as possible for the client. Many school districts also find it helpful to compile the findings of these questions into a Board or community presentation. Illustrating any assumptions made when projecting future enrollment provides far more understanding and support when planning decisions are made. With fall enrollment finalized, now is the perfect time to start thinking about 2017-2018 staffing and facilities needs.
